ARAB 3221 (3) The Making of Middle Eastern Identities: Arabs and Their Others

Who is Arab, anyway? When did Arabs first develop a sense of ethnic identity, and out of what raw materials did it grow and take shape? How did this identity play off of, merge with, or get challenged by contact with different peoples as the horizons of the Arab world grew and changed, and how does this manifest in literature and the historical record? This course offers a discussion-oriented, upper-level seminar that focused on sources in which the author, protagonists, or intended audience engage with ethno-racially non-Arab cultures.

Recommended: Prerequisite Intro to Religion or other course focusing on Islam and/or Middle Eastern history or culture.
