The PhD program in comparative ethnic studies offers an innovative and streamlined path to provide students with broad training to enable them to research and analyze the intersectional and relational workings of race, ethnicity, gender, class and sexuality in national and transnational contexts. It provides flexibility for students to pursue their individual research interests, while ensuring that they are grounded in both the foundational and cutting-edge theories in ethnic studies.

The department is dedicated to interrogating the relational nature of race and its attendant categories, particularly gender and sexuality, using frameworks that account for the increasingly transnational ways that these categories are constructed, resisted and inhabited. However, we believe that rigorous comparative and relational analyses can only grow out of deep groundings in the particular areas of Africana, Asian American, Chicana and Chicano, and Native American/Indigenous studies. Methodologically and theoretically, our faculty members possess training and expertise in interdisciplinary fields, including ethnic studies, women’s and gender studies, cultural studies, literary and film studies, border studies and American studies, as well as traditional disciplines, including anthropology, history, philosophy and sociology.

Requirements

Doctoral students are expected to demonstrate an ability to independently carry out original field research, acquire original data, make appropriate analyses and prepare reports of publishable caliber. Students must demonstrate proficiency in a broad subject of learning and the ability to critically evaluate work in ethnic studies. The PhD program is comprised of three basic components: coursework, a comprehensive examination and the dissertation.

A master’s degree in ethnic studies or a cognate field (e.g., American studies, English, history, sociology, women’s and gender studies, or other related disciplines and interdisciplinary fields) from an accredited university is required for admission into the PhD program.

Transfer of Credit

The associate chair for graduate studies (ACGS), in consultation with the Graduate Committee (GC), will examine the academic transcripts of admitted students to determine transfer credits where appropriate.

Students will be permitted to transfer up to a maximum of 9 credit hours. Students must submit a syllabus for each course to be considered for transfer, and will require the approval of the ACGS.

Required Courses and Credits

Students must complete 60 credit hours, with a minimum of 30 credit hours of graduate-level coursework (including any transferred graduate credit from the completed master’s degree referenced above). At least 18 of the 30 credit hours of graduate-level coursework must come from the Department of Ethnic Studies.

All doctoral students are required to complete the fall and spring sequence, ETHN 6000/ETHN 6001: Foundations in Comparative Ethnic Studies and Methods in Comparative Ethnic Studies (6 credits total, 3 per semester). The introductory, two-semester course will prepare doctoral students for interdisciplinary studies on race, ethnicity, gender, class, indigeneity, sexuality, nation and culture. The first semester will be a theoretical introduction, and the second semester will examine research methodologies and application of theories to research.

In addition to the two introductory courses, students will be required to enroll in a 1-credit professionalization seminar (ETHN 6002), which is a two-semester course offered by the Ethnic Studies Department that meets once a month during the academic year.

The remaining 23 credits will be selected in consultation with the student’s advisor from among ETHN graduate offerings, graduate courses in other units, and approved transfer credit up to 9 credit hours.

Subfield Requirement

The subfield requirement entails completing a minimum of 9 credits of graduate-level coursework in a department outside of Ethnic Studies (transferred credits may be used to satisfy this requirement). Depending on their research interests, students will select, in consultation with their advisor and the ACGS, either a thematic or disciplinary subfield. Disciplinary subfields can be chosen from cognate units including, but not limited to, history, sociology, economics, English, anthropology, religious studies, women’s and gender studies, humanities, communication, film, philosophy, political science, geography and art history. Thematic subfields allow students to select courses from departments outside of Ethnic Studies that relate to a thematic framework (e.g., postcolonialism and empire, diaspora and labor migration, etc.). Students will be advised by their advisor and the ACGS about their subfields, which will be highly individualized to suit the student’s particular research interests.

Dissertation Credits

In addition to the 30 credit hours of graduate-level coursework, students must complete a minimum of 30 dissertation credits in total: 5–10 during comprehensive examination preparation and 5–10 per semester when defending the prospectus and writing the dissertation. Students must be registered for a minimum of five dissertation hours the semester (including summer semester) in which the comprehensive exam/dissertation defense is held. Students are not permitted to register for more than 10 credit hours of dissertation credit per semester, per Graduate School rules.

Language Requirement

The department encourages, but does not require, foreign language proficiency, especially for students conducting research in sources other than English. Proficiency will be demonstrated by passing (with a grade of C or better) the fourth semester of a foreign language course, earning a passing score on the Graduate School foreign language test, or by an alternative mode of assessment agreed to by the Graduate Committee. Credits earned for language proficiency will not apply toward the doctoral degree. The goals of the language requirement are to ensure that doctoral scholars can research materials in other languages besides English. The department will work with the Graduate School to ensure that the language requirements are in parity with other interdisciplinary doctoral programs at CU Boulder.

Continuous Registration

A PhD student is required to register continuously as a full-time, regular degree-seeking student at CU Boulder for a minimum of five credit hours in the fall and spring semesters of each year. Students must be registered for a minimum of 5 dissertation hours per semester beginning with the semester following the passing of the comprehensive examination and extending through the semester in which the dissertation is successfully defended (final examination). A student who fails to register continuously after passing the comprehensive examination must retake and pass the examination to regain status as a student in good standing in the Graduate School.
