

CINEMA STUDIES - MINOR

The cinema studies minor is open to students in any field who are interested in the study of cinema history, culture and aesthetics, but who are too busy to pursue the full major. Students who pursue the cinema studies minor have the opportunity to develop their interest by acquiring critical and comparative skills and understanding the place and importance of cinema as a cultural and social phenomenon. Students in the minor have access to lower- and upper-division courses on film history, aesthetics, criticism, social and historical contexts, classical genres, and groundbreaking directors from the U.S. and abroad, acquiring an edge in visual analysis, critical thinking and media literacy.
