HISTORY

Historians study the past, in all of its complexity, to better understand our contemporary world and the forces that created it. Historians analyze change over time, and they use archival and other primary-source evidence to build interpretations that explain change and put it into context. In seeking to understand historical subjects on their own terms, and by appreciating the diverse perspectives of past actors, students of history develop empathy even as they rigorously engage with the ethical dimensions of past human decisions and actions. When students study the past on its own terms, they recognize their power to understand the present and shape the future.

History faculty conduct research and teach courses in a wide range of eras—from ancient to modern times—and across most major world areas including Africa and the Middle East, South and East Asia, Europe and the Americas. History faculty also pursue multiple methodologies and approaches, including cultural, diplomatic, demographic, economic, environmental, ethnic, gender, intellectual, legal, political, religious, social and transnational history.

Many students choose history as a major or minor because of their fascination with the rich imaginative terrain of the past, but the study of history is also practical. In the complex and contentious world in which we live, history provides the tools for thoughtful public citizenship. Historians are essential experts in helping us to navigate contemporary controversies, and the study of history cultivates the interpersonal skills and cultural awareness essential to heightening civic discourse and engagement. As importantly, students of history gain valuable skills that prepare them for careers in many fields. In this knowledge economy, employers increasingly want employees who can write and speak clearly and persuasively, who can read deeply and critically, who can think independently and ethically, who can do complex research and make cogent evidence-based arguments, who can locate relevant sources and discern good information from bad, who understand how and why change occurs, who are culturally literate and understand the complex world in which we live, and who can manage the diversity of the modern workplace in all of its forms. These are skills you will gain through the study of history and they are highly valued by today’s employers.

We welcome students who wish to develop the knowledge, skills and habits of mind essential to the discipline of history. Studying history will hone your abilities in reasoning, research, analysis and expression, and it will prepare you to participate in, and adapt to, an increasingly complex and interconnected world of continual change over time.

HIST 2500 (3) Fact and Fiction in History
Examines history and historical sources through the alternating lenses of \( \varphi_{\text{fact}} \) and \( \varphi_{\text{fiction}} \) in order to think not only about what happened, but how we acquire information and knowledge, and how we use sources and evidence to construct our own understandings of the past and to write history. Considers how narratives found in novels, myths, movies, television, music, visual material, monuments, or public memories, represent the past and relate to historical accounts.

HIST 2566 (3) Made in America: Work and Workers in American History
Puts the working lives of Americans, and the meaning of work in American life, in historical perspective. What "counts" as work and how has that changed over time? How do people's expectations of their working lives today compare to how people thought about work trajectories in the past? Whose work has been valued and whose has not? The course focuses mainly on the nineteenth and twentieth centuries while drawing parallels to the present.

HIST 2616 (3) History of Gender in America
Introduces the social and cultural construction of femininity and masculinity in America from 1500 to the present. Explores gender as a status acquired and performed through tasks, clothing, adornment and bodily movement. Examines gender ideals, expression and practices such as gender crossing, gender bending and gender plan.

HIST 2718 (3) History of Japan Through Cinema
Japan's incredibly rich cinematic tradition, from early 20th-century dramatic masterpieces to 21st-century anime, reveals much about its culture and history. We will use Japanese films to study key issues in the history of Japan, roughly between the years 1500-2000, including the changing role of the samurai, women and the 'floating world' of pleasure, modernization, the devastation of war, economic recovery, the downside of prosperity, and nostalgia for the past.

HIST 2728 (3) Japan: From Samurai to Kamikaze
Death-defying warriors prepared to cut their bellies and die over the slightest insult to their honor. Conscripted soldiers who charged uphill directly into the line of fire while shouting their loyalty to the emperor. Pilots who took off knowing they wouldn't return, blowing up military targets and themselves. This course peers beneath stereotypes in the military history of Japan from the first evidence of armed conflict through World War II and beyond.

HIST 3020 (3) Historical Thinking & Writing
The second cornerstone course for history majors centers on the essential skills all historians use. Students will advance their reading, sourcing, and research techniques, hone critical, analytical, and synthetic skills, navigate scholarly discourse, and practice historical writing. As this simultaneously satisfies the College's upper-division writing requirement, all sections involve substantial, regular, and varied writing assignments as well as instruction in methods and the revision process. All topical variations of this course are limited to a maximum of 18 students in order to focus on supporting students as they learn to write - and think - like an historian. Topics will vary by section. Recommended for sophomores or juniors, HIST 3020 may be taken concurrently with, but not prior to, HIST 1800.
Repeatable: Repeatable for up to 6.00 total credit hours.
Requisites: Requires prerequisite course HIST 3020 (minimum grade C-). Restricted to students with 27-180 credits (Soph, Jr, or Sr) HIST majors only.

HIST 4359 (3) The Global History of Modern Arabia
Examines the history, politics and society of the countries of the Arabian Peninsula (modern day Saudi Arabia, Oman, Yemen, Bahrain, Qatar and the UAE) in the period between 1800 and the present. The guiding assumption will be that the histories of Arabia cannot be studied in isolation from broader histories of capital formation, imperialism, religious reform, state formation and the discourses and practices which they informed. To that end, the focus will be on Arabia as part of the British, Ottoman and Omani Empires, a participant in Indian Ocean commerce, a source and destination for migrant scholars, students and laborers, the center of the petroleum economy and a domain of struggle for activists and intellectuals representing multiple political/ideological currents—not only Islamist, but also, liberal, socialist and communist.
